2017 Update Survey on Article 33 (2) of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities

Valentin Aichele

The Institute

The German Institute for Human Rights is the independent National Human Rights Institution in Germany. It is accredited according to the Paris Principles of the United Nations (A-status). The Institute's activities include the provision of advice on policy issues, human rights education, information and documentation, applied research on human rights issues and cooperation with international organizations. It is supported by the German Bundestag.

The Institute is additionally mandated to monitor the implementation of the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and has established Monitoring Bodies for these purposes.

Author

Dr. Valentin Aichele, LL.M. (University of Adelaide) has been with the German Institute for Human Rights since 2005. Since May 2009, he has served as head of the independent National CRPD Monitoring Mechanism.

Valentin Aichele's fields of expertise are, inter alia, public international law; non-discrimination; economic, social and cultural rights; human rights-based monitoring and evaluation; human rights treaty law in the justice system. He published his Ph.D. dissertation on National Human Rights Institutions in 2003.

The author would like to express his gratitude to Dr. Benjamin Stachursky, Felix Steigmann, and Dr. Judith Striek for their great support in relation to the preparation, conduct and analysis of the survey.

Summary

Article 33 (2) of the CRPD requires state parties to have a structural framework in place to promote, protect and monitor the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Person with Disabilities (CRPD) at the national level.

This “2017 Update Survey”, conducted by the German Institute for Human Rights, was done to identify the current situation how state parties implement these provisions. National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs) from all continents participated in the survey.

As to findings, a growing number of NHRIs are being mandated with the tasks set out in the CRPD, in particular with monitoring the Convention. While the decision on how to construct the monitoring framework at the national level has not yet been taken by a significant number of states parties, NHRIs elsewhere find themselves bearing, in roughly equal numbers, “sole responsibility” and “shared responsibility” to promote, to protect and to monitor the implementation of the right of persons with disabilities; one also finds states where institutions other than the NHRI have been charged with the tasks under Article 33 CRPD.

A comparison of the results of the 2017 Update Survey with those of similar survey conducted in 2011 indicates that there is a positive trend towards the strengthening of the role of National Human Rights Institution in the context of the CRPD in terms of numbers – either as the bearers of sole responsibility or responsibility shared with others.

1 Introduction

The Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) establishes obligations for State Parties to review and develop national structures and procedures on implementation, monitoring and related processes. Article 33 of the CRPD is truly innovative in this regard, as earlier human rights treaties had been reluctant to make requirements relating to internal institutional issues; in fact, this was the subject of fierce debate during the negotiation period in the Ad Hoc Committee between 2002 and 2004. Article 33 of the CRPD, whose heading is “National implementation and monitoring” reads, in sections 2 and 3,

“(2) States Parties shall, in accordance with their legal and administrative systems, maintain, strengthen, designate or establish within the State Party, a framework, including one or more independent mechanisms, as appropriate, to promote, protect and monitor implementation of the present Convention. When designating or establishing such a mechanism, States Parties shall take into account the principles relating to the status and functioning of national institutions for protection and promotion of human rights.

(3) Civil society, in particular persons with disabilities and their representative organizations, shall be involved and participate fully in the monitoring process.”

In 2011, the Canadian Human Rights Commission conducted a survey on the questions how state parties implement related obligation (see CHRC 2011).¹ This 2017 Update Survey, which was conducted by the German Institute for Human Rights, was conducted in particular with the intention of providing a basis for comparison of the situation in 2011 with the current situation and the identification of trends.

2 Legal background

The primary obligation for a State Party under sections 2 and 3 of Article 33 of the CRPD is to have a structural framework in place to promote, protect and monitor the implementation of the Convention at the national level, in which persons with disabilities and their representative organisations are fully involved and may participate in the monitoring process. While this very provision has continuously received a great degree of attention from the UN Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities², from scholars³ and others⁴ since the Convention's formal adoption in 2006 by the UN General Assembly, there is still a number of legal questions related to the legal understanding of it, as well as a discussion on the potential role of National Human Rights Institutions (NHRIs).

In this context, it must be noted that the CRPD Committee published "Guidelines on independent monitoring frameworks" in 2016 which were annexed to its revised Rules of Procedures.⁵ Further, one should take note of the Committee's recent draft "General Comment on article 4.3 and 33.3 of the Convention on the participation of persons with disabilities", a call for submission of comments on which was issued in early 2018.⁶

This is not the place to elaborate on the interpretation of these obligations in detail, but for the purpose of establishing a horizon for understanding the results of this survey, the following will be noted.⁷

It is commonly held that the fulfilment of these obligations can be achieved in one of two ways: A "framework" may consist of a single institution (so called single-agent model), or it may be comprised of a number of institutions linked together to serve the objectives under the relevant section (multi-agent model). In the case of the single-agent model, this study speaks of "sole responsibility" while it uses the term "shared responsibility" to describe the use of multi-agent model as the other institutional alternative. The central question in the questionnaire used in the survey presented here is whether the existing NHRI is involved in the chosen alternative, and if so, whether with sole or shared responsibility. Naturally, the survey designers were also interested in finding out about cases in which an institution other than the NHRI has been designated to perform the functions under section 2 and cases in which the State Party has not yet decided what model to adopt or which institution(s) will be involved, a circumstance covered by "not determined yet" in the tables.

Since we did not have an overview over the landscape of State Parties with respect to whether or how they had implemented Article 33 (2) as of 2017 or with respect to which role they may have assigned to a NHRI, this survey addresses a question of major import within the Global Alliance of National Human Rights Institutions (GANHRI) family.

3 Methodology

We turn now to the methods used in the 2017 survey, which was conducted by the German Institute for Human Rights. The survey questionnaire was distributed, in four languages (Arab, English, French, and Spanish), among GANHRI members (See Annex 2).

The cut-off date was 10 September 2017. At this time, the GANHRI family comprised 78 A-status and 32 B-status institutions (see overview presented by GANHRI 2017).⁸ The 40 replies from A-status institutions came from all four GANHRI regions, with a significant number of responses from each region (see table below), whereas only 9 replies came in from B-status institutions.⁹

As the questionnaire was sent out to all A-status institutions, there was a possibility that some institutions whose host countries had not (yet) ratified the CRPD would respond, as indeed two did.

The questionnaire underlying the 2017 survey was slightly longer but comparable in design to that of the 2011 survey, justifying comparisons between the 2011 and 2017 results and the identification of trends.

8 GANHRI (2017): Chart of the status of national institutions. Accreditations status as 26 May 2017. <https://nhri.ohchr.org/EN/Documents/Status%20Accreditation%20Chart%20.pdf> (accessed 03 May 2018).

9 Out of these 40 A-status respondent institutions, 38 have ratified the CRPD. The two non-state parties are Ireland (signature in 2007) and Timor-Leste (no action, yet).

4 Survey sample

With respect to the wider context of the results, one should note that 173 UN Members States out of 193 had ratified the CRPD (which is about 90%) at the cut-off date. Out of these 173 CRPD State Parties, 68 maintained an A-status institution. Out of the group of A-status institutions, 40 responses were received, i.e. more than 50% of the NHRIs in this group. With respect to the four GANHRI regions, 21 of the institutions that replied are from Europe, making up more than the half of the group of A-status respondent institutions.

The analysis of the responses from the European group presents a clear picture of the situation. The replies from the other regions must be considered sufficiently numerous to permit general observations to be made for each of these four regions and for the global level (21% of the institutions from Africa, 27% from the Americas and 53% from Asia-Pacific regions responded). These are sufficient to allow general observations to be made.

Replies by A-status institutions, broken down by GANHRI region:

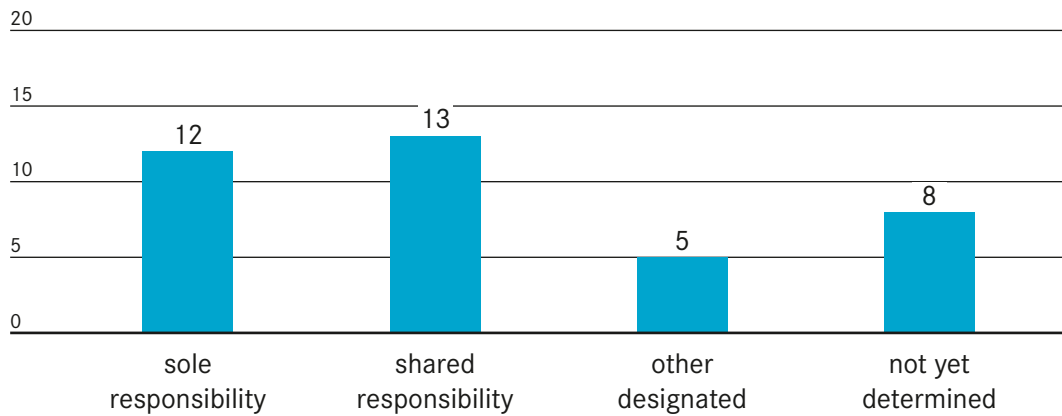

5 Outcomes

In 2017, among the respondent A-status institutions, 32% have sole responsibility, 34% share responsibility, while 13% of the respondent institutions indicated that an institution other than the NHRI was responsible (“other designated”).¹⁰ The replies from 21% of the respondent A-status institutions indicated that the State Party had not yet taken a decision.

Outcomes (only A-status institutions)

¹⁰ Note please: figures relate to responses from A-status institutions in UN member states that have ratified the CRPD.

6 Trends since 2011

In comparison with the 2011 sample (due to differences in the survey samples, comparisons must be expressed in terms of percentages rather than absolute numbers) one finds a six percentage point increase in the proportion of A-status institutions having sole responsibility, a 15 percentage point increase in the proportion of A-status institutions with shared responsibility and the prevalence of institution(s) “other than the A-status institution” responsible is two percentage points greater. Only the percentage of State Parties that have not taken a decision yet has decreased, down by 23 percentage points in 2017 compared to the data from the 2011 replies.

7 Conclusion

Based on the trends towards increasing numbers of NHRIs in charge of promoting, protecting and monitoring the rights of persons with disabilities under the CRPD, one can conclude that the idea of the framers of the CRPD, who had the NHRIs in mind when they negotiated on the wording of Article 33 CRPD, is becoming an institutional reality.

Although more and more states parties have been making decisions on their monitoring structures, one still finds many examples of states parties that have not made up their minds, and the question arises as to whether advice from GANHRI and its partners in its tripartite-partnership (the OHCHR and UNDP), if requested, might help them to come to a solution that will work well for them. As the structures required under Article 33(2) are of utmost importance for creating a positive dynamic of implementation at the national level, in particular to provide participation opportunities for persons with disabilities and their representative organisation, these decisions should not be postponed.

At the same time, this brief survey, due to its brevity, leaves a number of interesting points unaddressed, e.g. in cases where an NHRI has sole responsibility how the monitoring mandate fit in with the NHRI's traditional mandate to promote and to protect human rights, or what role do NHRI have in the context of the existing multi-agent framework and how do these frameworks work, in particular are persons with disabilities and their representative organisation part of these frameworks and if not, how does the structure secure their full involvement and participation in the monitoring process.
