ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE AND AUTOMATED DECISION MAKING

Artificial Intelligence is used in policing, migration, social protection, healthcare and education.

NHRIs call for transparency, explainability, meaningful human oversight and accountability.

> Where rights are affected, individuals must be able to understand decisions, contest them and obtain redress.

DIGITAL INCLUSION

Digitalisation must not become a barrier to rights.

States must ensure digital public services are accessible, inclusive, safe and affordable.

> Non-digital alternatives must be maintained so no one is excluded.

GENDERED DIGITAL HARMS

There are distinct gendered risks in digital environments: technology-facilitated gender-based violence, non-consensual intimate imagery, and online harassment.

Digital governance frameworks must integrate a gender perspective and effectively address these harms.

ENVIRONMENT

Digital technologies could severely harm the environment and exacerbate climate change, undermining the rights of communities already in situations of climate-vulnerability.

> Digital transformation must be guided by international environmental law alongside human rights law.

STRONGER TOGETHER

Effective oversight requires coordination between NHRIs, data protection authorities, equality bodies, regulators and other competent oversight institutions.

> Through GANHRI and the regional networks, NHRIs will exchange experiences, promote peer learning and advocate for a human rights-respecting approach to digital governance.
